Two thieves named Hamat and Berard.
In the Vicarage of Lan
Resolved one Night to Steal a Pig
From a poor Husbandman

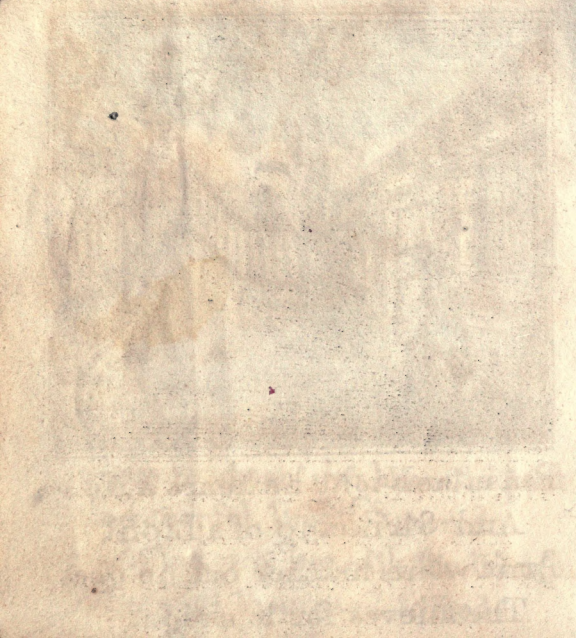

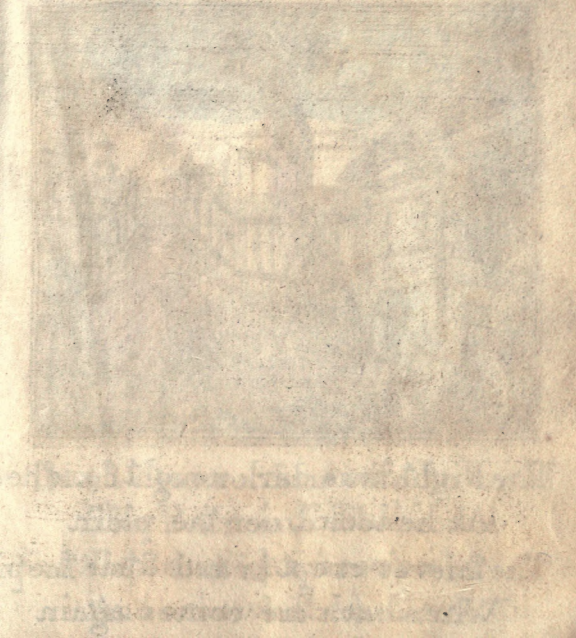

The husbandman o'er hears the plot
And fearful they'll Succeed
Secrets the pig beneath the trough
Where oft they used to feed

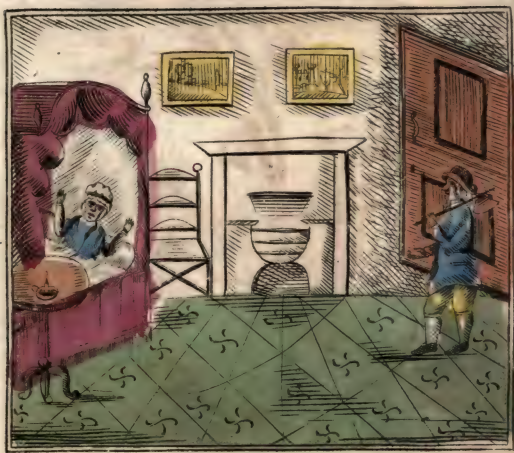

But in the Night he hears a Noise,
And Strikeing of a Light
Arm'd with a hatchet out he goes
The thieves for to afright

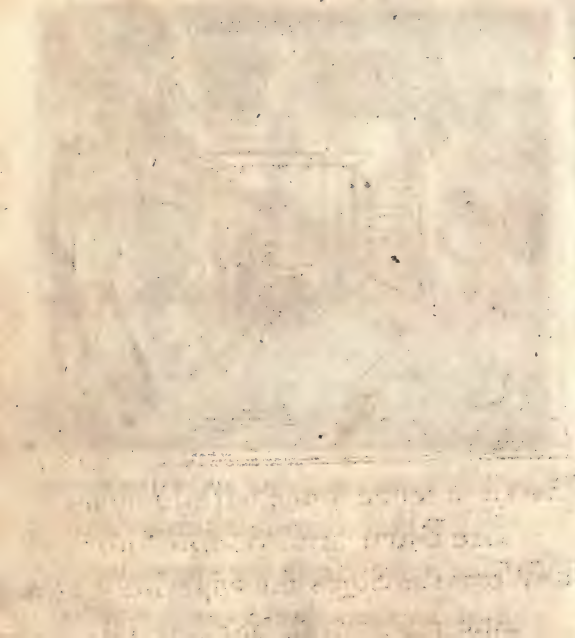

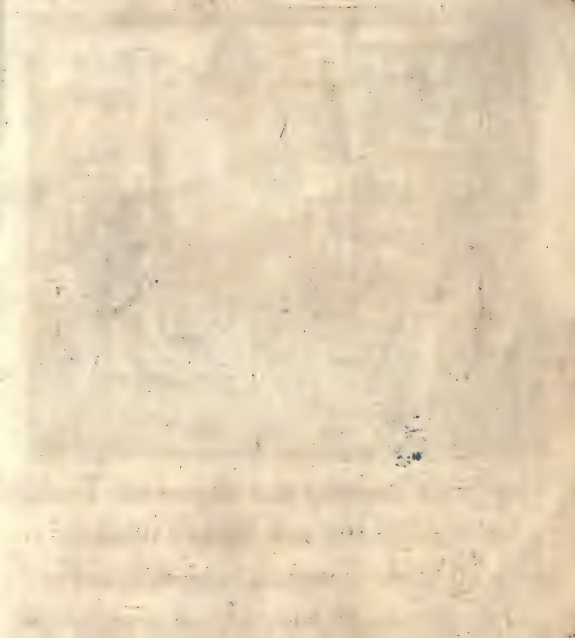

The Night was dark nought could he see
As he look'd o'er the plain
The thieves crept in and Stole the pig
When back he comes again

Tis all Secure dear wife he cries
The Barn and Stable too
She Weeps she Sighs she wipes her eye's
And cries what shall we do

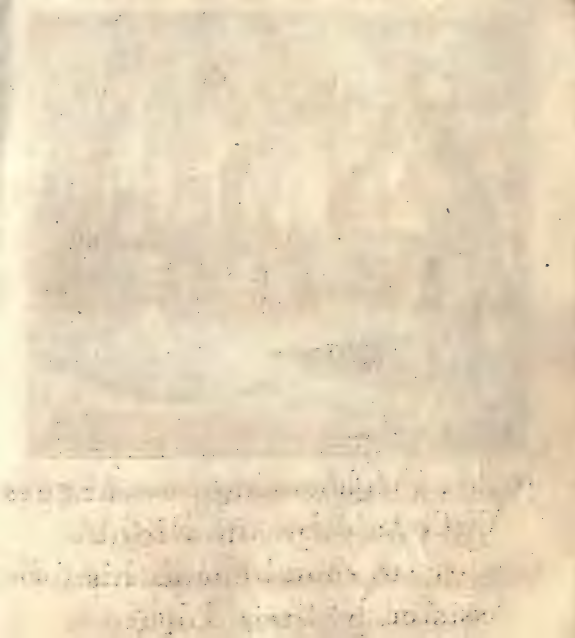

Go Seek the pig the thieves I heard
Come in When you where Out
Indeed dear Travers much I fear'd
They woud have Cut my throat

Oh God forbid the husband Cries
And out with speed he ran
Do keep from Crying if your Wise
From Laughing if you Can

Then to a Neighbouring wood he goes
All Cover'd by the Night
With Joy he soon beholds his foes
Assisted by their Light

Then up a tree he Slowly climbs
And with a hollow tone
He cry's Repent ye of your Crimes
And let the pig alone

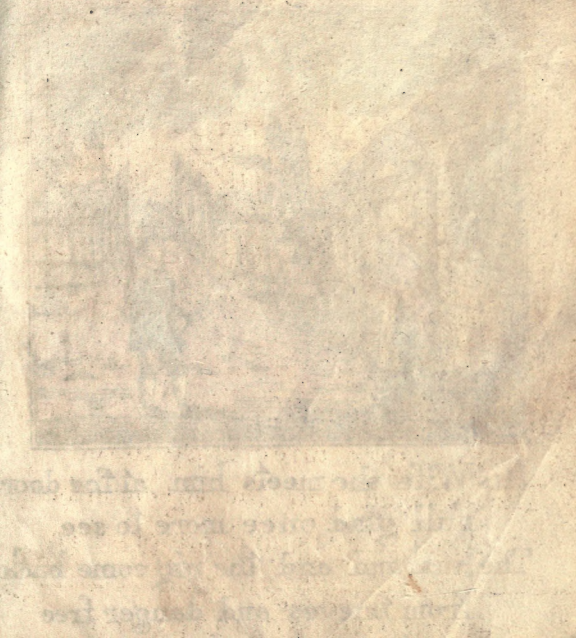

Half dead with fear full fast they fly
Afraid to look behind
They think Old Nick is at their heels
Or Something of his kind

Then down comes Travers from the tree
And Seizing of the Spoil
For fear the thieves should Come again
He Vows the Pig he'd boil

His Wife she meets him at the door
Full glad once more to see
The husband and the pig come back
From thieves and danger free
